Summary Purpose of Paper:	The NHS needs to plan for and respond to a wide range of emergencies and business continuity incidents that could affect the health/patient safety of individuals or populations. Typically these are related to severe weather, outbreaks of diseases (e.g. flu) and major incidents. A significant amount of planning and testing takes place across the public sector under the Civil Contingencies Act (2004). In the health service this work is referred to as EPRR. Each year an NHS wide assurance process is carried out against the core standards and the process for 2018 is being carried out by NHS England between September and October. As part of this the CCG is required to complete a self-assessment and CCGs support NHS England in seeking assurance from providers. The paper provides further detail on the process and arrangements in place for the CCG. The CCG is overall assessed as green. In this year's self-assessment there is a specific focus on the following domains;            Governance            Training and exercising            Business Continuity            Incident Coordination Centre
